about us

It's hard to sum up our life in just a few words—we love big, play hard, and embrace the beautiful chaos. At the center of it all is Jesus, grounding us even on the wildest days.

Our family currently includes our two biological children and three amazing foster kiddos, so the chaos is real—and full of joy. We're incredibly close to finalizing the adoption of two of our foster children and remain hopeful that we'll get to adopt the third.

Our greatest hope is to complete our family through private adoption. While infertility was a tough chapter, it opened the door to the big, love-filled family we'd always dreamed of.

We love this life—and truly feel like we're living the dream.

our home + neighborhood

We recently moved to Stephanie's childhood home and it has been so fun to watch our children explore the same areas that her and her siblings did. It's a large home that fits our needs perfectly and there's never a lack of something to do. Our two acres gives plenty of space for the kids to ride their dirtbike and fourwheeler and between playing and swimming, they have spent most of the summer being outside.

We live out in the country surrounded by fields and our neighbors are the kind that have been there all your life. It's a quiet, respectful community and we love it like that.

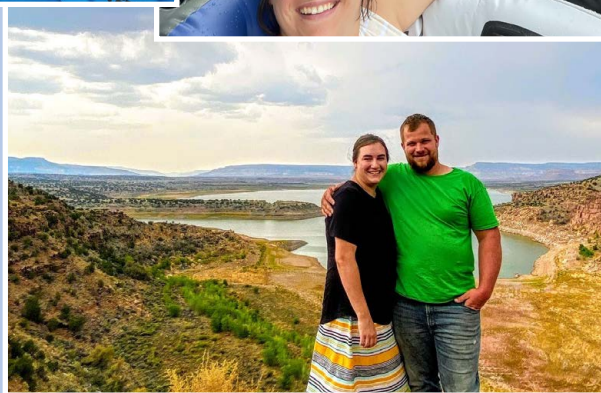

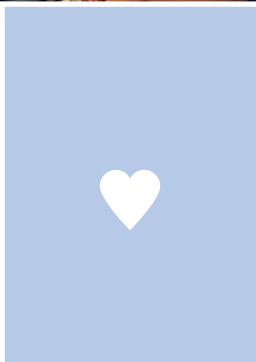

adoption in our life

Adoption has always held a special place in our hearts. In 2020, Morgan adopted Kensley (Stephanie's biological daughter), completing our family at the time. When we began facing infertility, we turned to foster care as a way to love and support children in need. Over the years, many incredible kids have come through our home—each leaving a lasting impact.

Now, we're overjoyed to be nearing the completion of an adoption from foster care, officially welcoming them as our son and daughter.

We believe adoption is just as meaningful—if not more—than having a child biologically. Every child who joins our family is welcomed with open arms and open hearts, and we feel incredibly honored to grow our family through adoption.

Through our experience with foster care, we've connected with an incredible group of friends who truly understand our journey. We laugh together, and on the hard days, we cry together. Their support has often been the glue that holds us together, and we're so grateful to walk this path with them. Like us, they're eagerly awaiting the chance to welcome a sweet little one into our family.

We're also surrounded by a close-knit, loving family. Morgan's parents live just across town, and Stephanie's dad lives in the front apartment of our home. They're always the first we call and never hesitate to step in and help.

We each have three local siblings, and our kids are deeply loved by them. They are truly the best aunts and uncles we could ever ask for.

Hey there, sweet mama,

We just want you to know how strong and amazing you are. We can't begin to imagine how hard this decision is or all the emotions you're feeling, but we see your courage and love in trying to choose what's best for your little one.

If we could reach across the miles and give you a hug, we absolutely would. Pregnancy is hard enough on its own, and navigating what comes next adds a level of challenge many will never understand. We want to step into that with you—with open hearts and arms.

We've spent much of our married life doing foster care, and while we've poured love into every child who's come through our home, we still long to give a "forever" to a little one of our own. Though infertility hasn't been easy, we believe it's part of the path that led us here—to fostering, to adoption, and hopefully, to you.

We believe adoption is one of the greatest gifts we could give and receive. We're here not just to offer a loving, joyful home to your baby, but to support and care for you, too. We're praying for you in this season of unimaginable strength and hope we have the chance to get to know you better.

Much love and hugs,

morgan + stephanie
